

Do you need to recommend a tool for creating online learning?

Are you trying to determine the difference between instructional design for the classroom and for online learning?

Do you have existing classroom materials that you want to convert into effective online learning classes?

If you answered yes to these questions, this class will help you learn the basics of designing online learning.

Introduction to Designing Online Learning

This one day class teaches you how to plan an online learning strategy and how to create the appropriate courses. The class will cover a wide range of topics, including how to:

- Select an appropriate tool for your online learning
- Apply online instructional design techniques to your course
- Develop a storyboard
- Use a wide range of resources to improve your courses
- Design effective online presentations using elements such as fonts and colors
- Use multi-media functions (graphics, audio, and Flash content) to create valuable training materials
- Design effective assessments
- Assess the usability and accessibility of your materials
- Create SCORM-compliant training
- Understand how your online learning works with a Learning Management System (LMS)

This hands-on class is intended for:

- Trainers and Facilitators who are new to online learning
- Instructional Designers with classroom experience
- Training Managers having to oversee the transition to online learning
